A father-daughter moment between Omar and 9-month-old Djina at their home in Senegal. ChildFund, in partnership with USAID, has connected remote areas of Senegal to the formal health care system through health huts run by trained community health volunteers.

ChildFund International is an independent and child-centered development organization. We are a member of the ChildFund Alliance, a global network of 12 organizations that assist more than 15 million children in 58 countries.

We work with partners in communities throughout Asia, Africa, the Americas and the United States to change the underlying conditions that prevent children from achieving their potential.

Our Vision

A world in which children realize their rights and achieve their potential.

Our Mission

Help children who experience deprivation, exclusion and vulnerability to build the capacity to improve their lives and become young adults, parents and leaders who bring lasting and positive change in their communities.

Promote societies whose individuals and institutions participate in valuing, protecting and advancing the worth and rights of children.

Enrich supporters' lives by involving them in our cause.

MESSAGE FROM ANNE LYNAM GODDARD

DEAR FRIENDS,

This spring in Liberia, I had an encounter that I've carried with me ever since. It was just after the country had been declared Ebola-free for the first time. We were visiting one of our Interim Care Centers for children who had lost caregivers to the virus — safe, caring environments where they could be monitored for symptoms.

We staffed centers there and in Sierra Leone with Ebola survivors; immune to the disease, they could safely interact with the children. No one else could have eased their fears and traumas as these very special caregivers did, having gone through so much themselves.

One had left her own child in others' care so she could live on site. She told me, "I just kept thinking about all these children who had lost their mothers — how could I not help them?"

This spirit drives and sustains so much of our work: How can I not help? We see it in you, our donors. We see it worldwide — in mothers who mentor younger mothers, in community health volunteers, in youth who improve their communities, in concerned neighbors who together protect children from violence.

And this year, we saw that spirit in the hundreds of thousands of people who joined us and ChildFund Alliance in calling upon world leaders to make ending violence against children a priority in the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), the world's next set of goals for ending extreme poverty globally.

Now that the SDGs officially include this priority, the real work begins.

Anne Goddard with children in Liberia just after the country was declared free of Ebola.

"This spirit drives and sustains so much of our work: How can I not help? We see it in you, our donors. We see it worldwide."

At ChildFund, we're excited to build on our long experience in child protection, from our work with child soldiers to initiatives on child labor, early marriage, trafficking and more. We advocate for stronger national policies and funding as we support local action involving children, families, communities and governments to make the world safer for the most vulnerable.

I've never been more grateful for your generous support of ChildFund and all it makes possible for children who have so much to offer our world. Thank you for standing with us.

With warmest regards,

Anne Lynam Goddard

LETTER FROM OUR BOARD CHAIR, MARILYN F. GRIST

Marilyn Grist visiting a school in Guatemala last spring.

DEAR FRIENDS,

In my years on ChildFund's board, I've participated in many strategy discussions about allocating our resources toward approaches that bring results. These take on a whole new meaning every time I travel to communities where we work.

I love learning firsthand how your support makes such a difference for the children and families in ChildFund's programs. I saw it recently in a clean, well-cared-for Guatemalan village that contrasted sharply with nearby villages of similar means. I met with a ChildFund-supported youth group who had taken an active interest in environmental issues, volunteering in a community-wide cleanup and launching a recycling campaign. They had planted trees and even lobbied local leaders to "bring back green."

How exciting and gratifying to see the tangible results of young people's engagement in their own communities — young people with the skills to identify a need and work together for the common good, with the confidence and courage to raise their voices and make a difference.

That's ChildFund's true impact: changing the lives of children, who are our future, so they can change their world.

Another example unfolded this year during West Africa's Ebola outbreak. ChildFund youth volunteers in Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone took the message of Ebola prevention throughout their communities during a frightening time. Because they knew their villages and their villages knew them, these young people were uniquely positioned to teach their neighbors how to protect themselves from the deadly virus. We're proud of them — and grateful.

Children really can change the world, especially when they have access to the nutrition, health care, education, opportunities and protection they need. That's exactly what our programs are designed to do.

Your invaluable support makes such a difference, as you'll read in this year's annual report. We are enormously grateful for your trust. I'm honored to be part of this incredible work with you.

With thanks,

Marilyn F. Grist

PROTECTING CHILDHOOD AT EVERY STAGE

Advocating for the Rights of Children Worldwide

Children and adults around the world made green handprints to mark support for ChildFund Alliance's Free From Violence campaign. The campaign gathered more than 680,000 signatures on a petition advocating that the global community make violence against children a priority in the United Nations' new goals for fighting poverty. Our lobbying — joined with a chorus of likeminded organizations and individuals worldwide — succeeded. As we prepared this annual report for publication, the U.N. included the protection of children from violence, exploitation and abuse in the Sustainable Development Goals adopted in September 2015.

PROTECTING CHILDHOOD

FROM CONCEPTION TO EARLY ADULTHOOD

Every child deserves a safe and healthy childhood. We envision a world where every child receives clean water, nourishing food, shelter, medical checkups, loving care and education. Children live free from violence in all its forms — from neglect or physical punishment to bullying or sexual abuse — in their homes, schools and neighborhoods. Headlines of rape, torture and trafficking of children fade away. We envision a world where children can grow into the next generation's parents and teachers; police officers, lawyers and social workers; community and faith leaders.

The well-being and protection of children is at the heart of our work. This means meeting a child's basic needs as well as preventing and responding to violence.

A show of hands for nonviolence: This young girl in South Jakarta, Indonesia, has marked her support of ChildFund Alliance's Free From Violence campaign.

"Research shows early exposure to violence can disrupt brain development of young children, affecting their ability to grow and learn."

Consider these global statistics:

- Six in 10 children between the ages of 2 and 14 worldwide regularly suffer physical punishment by their caregivers.
- Nearly one-quarter of girls ages 15 to 19 report they have been victims of some form of physical violence since turning 15.
- Homicide took the lives of about 95,000 children and adolescents under the age of 20 in 2012 alone.

As reported in UNICEF's 2014 statistical analysis of violence against children, Hidden in Plain Sight.

Research shows early exposure to violence can disrupt brain development in young children, affecting their ability to grow and learn. Persistent, extreme stress can impair the development of a child's nervous and immune systems. This can lead to poor school performance and, later in life, stress-related health problems like heart disease, substance abuse and depression — all of which can diminish an individual's economic prospects and even lead to poverty.

Children face risks unique to their age.

Before birth, development can be impaired if the mother lacks access to health care and proper nutrition or suffers stress or violence. This can lead to poor brain development, low birth rate, even miscarriage and stillbirth.

Infants and young children risk violence at home by the very parents and caregivers they depend upon. They may also be harmed if their mothers suffer domestic violence.

School-aged children risk dangers on the road to school. They may face violent punishment from caregivers or teachers, as well as bullying or sexual violence.

Adolescents and young adults may be vulnerable to sexual or gender-based violence, forced marriage or early pregnancy.

Circles of Support

We partner with local community groups, placing children at the center of comprehensive programs to strengthen protective environments. You'll find us in tiny villages around the world conducting training programs for parents, educators or nurses — as well as in government capitals advocating for children's rights.

CHILDREN

We support children in understanding their rights and standing up for themselves as change agents who transform their own lives — and their communities.

FAMILIES

We help families learn how to protect and care for children and gain financial stability to better meet their children's essential needs.

COMMUNITIES

We build community resources to protect children, raising awareness and offering programs for parent-teacher associations, parenting groups, health workers and other community organizations for and about children.

LOCAL INSTITUTIONS

We strengthen existing local institutions — health care, schools, social services and police, for example — to prevent and respond to abuse and exploitation, working together to provide system-wide support.

NATIONAL SYSTEMS

We make sure the voices of children and communities are heard as we promote national measures to protect children, advocating for children's rights with all branches of governments, policymakers, nongovernmental organizations and aid donors.

INTERNATIONAL ADVOCACY

Our advocacy for children's rights and protection extends to international nongovernmental organizations and policy makers, the United Nations and aid donors.

"Children have the right to be protected." Thirteen-year-old Hoa of Vietnam asserts this basic right for himself and children worldwide.

PROTECTING CHILDHOOD

FOR THE YOUNGEST CHILDREN AGES 0-5

A child's earliest experiences of family and home form the foundation for all that follows. Our work with children from before birth through age 5 includes special attention to their development and protection, recognizing the effects that violence, neglect or high stress in the home can have on children during these years.

Our programs help families make decisions in the best interests of their children, combining home- and center-based interventions to strengthen caregiver-child relationships as well as families' economic security and access to services.

A Dependable Livelihood for Parents Improves Life for the Youngest Children

Before ChildFund began work in her community, Adanech and her young family struggled every day to make ends meet. Today, she owns a business, employs five people and plans to grow her enterprise further. "More importantly, my children are healthy and in school," she said.

Her weaving business got its start through the PEPFAR/USAID-funded Yekokeb Berhan program, which has worked since 2011 to create a child-focused social welfare network in Ethiopia. A collaboration among Pact, Family Health International (FHI 360) and ChildFund International, along with many local partner organizations, Yekokeb Berhan aims to reach 500,000 highly vulnerable children in HIV-affected communities throughout the country.

Preventing Child Trafficking in Indonesia

ChildFund continued a four-year initiative launched in 2014 to prevent the trafficking of infants and young children in 27 of the poorest communities in Central Java, where financial desperation as well as limited access to reproductive health care too often drive young parents to relinquish their children to traffickers. Low rates of birth

In Ethiopia, new business owner Adanech, 28, holds her son, Yohannes, beside a weaving machine operated by one of her employees.

Child trafficking is a widespread threat in Indonesia. Three-year-old Angga and his friend play safely at a ChildFund-sponsored Early Childhood Development center in Central Java.

registration in remote communities deprive many children of government support or intervention; without birth certificates, they cannot access services that might help them.

Made possible through generous support from a longtime ChildFund donor and a new partnership with Intel, the project has three main goals: research to better understand young-child trafficking in Indonesia, awareness-raising among at-risk populations, and training for 2,500 young men and women, some of them parents, in computer literacy to help them find safe, decently paid employment. The young people will be better able to protect themselves and their families — and share their knowledge within their communities. About 150 are already training their peers.

Sometimes, Unintended Neglect Results From Lack of Access to Basic Health Care

Umi, a mother of six, remembered one terrifying day when one of her children had convulsions, and she almost didn't reach the health center in time. Most of the 12.5 million people in Senegal live miles from the nearest medical center. ChildFund, in cooperation with the country's health ministry, is leading a consortium of non-governmental organizations to improve health care at the community level nationwide. Since receiving a five-year, $40 million grant in 2011 from USAID, ChildFund has refurbished volunteer-run health huts, built new ones and linked them to a national health system, continuing work we began in 1998. Today, more than 2,000 health huts are a crucial part of the Senegalese health system, ensuring access to lifesaving medications and treatment options nearby for children in need, expectant mothers and the elderly.

From the community health volunteers who staff the nearby health hut, Umi has learned how to recognize danger signs like malaria symptoms and dehydration from diarrhea and can now seek care early. "Before, my children had diarrhea, malaria and other illnesses more frequently," she said. "Now they are healthier."

Umi with her six children in Senegal: "Now when a child has a fever, I take him straight to the health hut."

Reaching Indigenous Families in Guatemala

This year, the Japan Social Development Fund donated $2.75 million through the World Bank to help improve the health and development of 12,200 children younger than 2 in Guatemala's highlands. ChildFund will lead the four-year project, addressing two of the greatest barriers facing indigenous children: chronic malnutrition and the kind of emotional and psychological neglect that stems from uninformed parenting.

Parents will receive training and support through a Guatemalan government program that provides community health and nutrition services and encourages breastfeeding, good hygiene and nutrition. Trained guide mothers will show parents how to stimulate children through daily routines at home. And children will grow up healthy and strong.

PROTECTING CHILDHOOD

FOR SCHOOL-AGED CHILDREN AGES 6-14

Education means freedom — freedom to pursue your goals and dreams, freedom from ignorance and illiteracy, freedom to advocate for your beliefs and against injustice. Children ages 6 to 14 are at the key time of their lives when they should be able to receive full educations; when they don't, the world becomes a crueler, less open place, with fewer safe employment options and vulnerability to exploitation.

Safe at School in Honduras and Timor-Leste

During the past two years in Honduras, parents, children and teachers worked together on the Miles de Manos (Thousands of Hands) project to create safe, peaceful and child-friendly spaces with comfortable seats, a quiet atmosphere and good lighting, which allows students to concentrate on their studies.

As 2015 draws to a close, ChildFund is about to implement the program in 36 more schools and is receiving financial support through a USAID grant.

In Timor-Leste, we focus on stopping corporal punishment in school. Sixty-seven percent of Timor-Leste students polled in a recent government survey said they had been hurt physically at school. Children Against Violence, a program supported by ChildFund, uses dramatic skits performed by students to spread the message that physical discipline does not belong in school.

"Children experience corporal punishment, so their voice is the most credible when talking about how it affects them and that it is still happening," said Mariazinha da Costa, ChildFund Timor-Leste's education program assistant. She added, "It demonstrates to children that they can find solutions and take action against the problems in their own communities."

At a national forum on children's rights, more than 1,000 people, including teachers, students and government officials, saw the 10-minute dramas. The children had a direct channel to national policymakers — a key, da Costa said, to creating change.

Increasing Literacy Among Nomadic Children

In Afghanistan's north, nomadic peoples herd animals and move according to the seasons. Because they don't stay in a single community, children rarely attend school. The literacy rate among men is less than 7 percent, and among women less than 2 percent. To address this challenge, ChildFund has established a flexible system of community-based classes and study groups to support girls' education, with assistance from local school leaders. We also work closely with Afghanistan's Ministry of Education to ensure its support of the project.

Financial support has come from multiple sources. A £1.7 million grant from the United Kingdom's Department for International Development, administered by PricewaterhouseCooper and implemented by ChildFund, provides nomadic children with access to education. Also, ChildFund donors raised more than $36,000 to support literacy efforts for 2,000 children, including 1,200 girls, in Afghanistan.

Tailoring our approach to the needs of nomadic children helps ChildFund improve literacy rates in Afghanistan.

Reading Programs in India and the Philippines

Last spring, ChildFund and our literacy campaign partner, Macmillan Education, conducted a baseline assessment of 1,200 children from impoverished families across 15 Indian states. Of 6- to 8-year-olds tested, 66.2 percent were not able to read at all, while 44.8 percent of 11- and 12-year-olds and 29 percent of 13- and 14-year-olds were illiterate.

Books, My Friends — launched in December 2014 to create a reading culture in poor, under-educated communities — aims to give nearly 115,000 under-served children in 14 states age-appropriate storybooks. Families in some rural areas receive solar-powered lamps with chargers that can be used for cell phones and flashlights.

India's Reading Improvement Program, its flagship education initiative, helps address systemic problems, while Books, My Friends encourages children ages 6 through 14 to read for fun. Several months in, about 40,000 children have received books and tote bags.

The Philippines' READ program provides books for first- through third-graders in Mindanao, one of the country's poorest, least-educated regions, where only a third of students read at grade level.

Launched in 2012 with the assistance of a ChildFund donor, READ has provided more than 4,000 children with age-appropriate books, training for teachers and parents, peer-to-peer tutoring and reading activities at school. During the past year, children received nearly 1,000 new books that reflect Mindanao's culture and indigenous languages. Forty-two teachers also received literacy-focused training that emphasizes interactive learning and child participation, which makes children more engaged and excited about learning. Also, 13 schools adopted the DEAR practice — when teachers shout, "Drop everything and read!" and let children pick up books of their choice and simply read.

Books, My Friends helps children discover the joy of reading. Colorful new totebags and books light the smiles of Jamuna, age 12; Lila, 10; Champa, 12; and Nanalal, 12, in India.

"Children ages 6 to 14 are at the key time of their lives when they should be able to receive full educations; when they don't, the world becomes a crueler, less open place, with fewer safe employment options and vulnerability to exploitation."

PROTECTING CHILDHOOD

YOUNG PEOPLE IN ADOLESCENCE AGES 15-24

Adolescence is a critical juncture in the journey toward a healthy, productive adulthood. Young people become increasingly independent. Their world expands beyond family and school. ChildFund programs around the world help young people ages 15 to 24 safely navigate this time of transformation and risk. We partner with local agencies to build young people's abilities to make good lifestyle choices, protect themselves, treat others respectfully and manage conflict. We also provide training in job skills to foster economic independence, and provide opportunities for young people to get involved, be heard and become agents of change in their families, communities and society at large. We work to prevent and respond to exploitation of all kinds, including trafficking, forced or early marriage and harmful traditional practices.

Our programs described here are comprehensive, based on proven approaches in youth development, violence prevention and child protection. Young people respond best to other young people, so we train mentors to develop innovative, experiential ways — such as theater, puppetry, role play and skits — to help their peers engage in their communities; explore attitudes toward key developments in their communities and societies, including gender and violence, sexual and reproductive health; and to develop communication and leadership skills.

With job training, we help adolescents learn ways to support themselves and contribute to their local economy. Young people learn best by doing, so our programs include micro-projects, where they work together to identify specific community needs and ways to solve them.

“ChildFund programs around the world help young people ages 15 to 24 safely navigate this time of transformation and risk.”

“You educate somebody, you educate the whole community because when you educate them they'll go back to their community, they'll make a contribution, they'll inspire people in their lives. It cascades to everyone.”
— Doras Chirwa, Program Director, ChildFund Zambia

“Becoming a nurse has been my passion. It has been my dream.”

As a boy visiting his father in the hospital, Bright Chama watched a patient die while waiting in line for treatment. That's when he decided to study nursing. He tells this story in a video recently produced by The MasterCard Foundation about the Zambia Nurse and Life Skills Training program, implemented by ChildFund International and Amref Health Africa in partnership with The MasterCard Foundation, to help young men and women secure employment while also meeting an acute need for nurses in Zambia. The $7.6 million program will give several thousand students the chance to be nurses. You can watch the video here: bit.ly/1OzjOAG.

“I discovered I had a voice ... and could contribute.”

As a child in the Philippines, Joefil suffered bullying from children, adults, even members of his family. He was too short and his spine curved because of a fall when he was 4. In sixth grade, he gained a ChildFund sponsor, and he enrolled in programs to build life skills and self-awareness. It was a “turning point,” Joefil said, as he learned to accept his condition and other people's attitudes. He became a youth group leader and, with the help of his sponsors, finished college. After Super Typhoon Haiyan tore through the Philippines in late 2013, Joefil supervised several Child-Centered Spaces set up by ChildFund to give children safe refuge. He taught parents about child protection and advocated with local government to make protecting children a priority. He plans to return to school and dedicate himself to serving children — in a life trajectory that's taken him from sponsored child to child protector.

“Strong agriculture, strong country.”

Imaculada, age 18, believes a combination of traditional and modern practices is the best way to advance agriculture in her country. She traveled to Dili from her home district of Covalima in Timor-Leste for on-the-job training in crops and horticultural methods. In this rural country where job opportunities for a burgeoning youth population are scarce, ChildFund's Youth Employment Model undergirds programs that include vocational training in fields ranging from hospitality to agriculture. The programs here add a sixth component to the model — sexual and reproductive health training as a preventive measure against the gender-based violence and discrimination that many youth in the program, particularly young women, report. Such knowledge, coupled with life skills training, also protects against sexual exploitation, particularly for vocational trainees in tourism and hospitality. Since launching the program in 2011, Timor-Leste has trained 11,485 young people based on the model; in 2015, the program reached 2,061 young people.

“Violence is a problem we all face, and we youth leaders must find a solution.”

In Bolivia, where domestic violence is pervasive and often unreported, 15-year-old Jaime used his creative talents to help his youth club create a puppet show to teach children, youth and adults in his community about the dangers of violence in the family. They made puppets of recycled paper and balloons, then developed a story script that both entertains and teaches. “With our puppet stories, we teach ... any kind of violence is not acceptable,” Jaime said. The youth club has changed his life. “I became a democratic leader when I learned to ask and respect my friends' opinions,” he said.

PROTECTING CHILDHOOD

IN TIMES OF CRISIS

Safe Places for Children Amid the Ebola Epidemic

In 2015, ChildFund staff members in West Africa confronted the worst outbreak of the Ebola virus in recent history. In Guinea, Liberia and Sierra Leone, more than 11,000 people lost their lives. Amid panic, rumors and chaos, a plan to help children exposed to Ebola took root in Monrovia, Liberia, in October 2014.

With assistance from trained volunteers and Liberia's Ministry of Health and Social Welfare, ChildFund opened its first Interim Care Center (ICC) for children who had lost one or both parents and required observation for signs of the virus. After the trauma of seeing their own parents become deathly ill and die, and then being shunned by fearful neighbors and relatives, the children needed safe places to stay and receive comfort and care.

Many of the volunteers who watched the children were Ebola survivors themselves, understood the fear and stigma associated with the disease and had immunity to the virus. Soon after the opening of the Kelekula ("willing heart") ICC in Liberia, other centers opened in Sierra Leone, also staffed by survivors and funded in part by the Golder Trust for Orphans and Procter & Gamble.

"When the ICCs were established, survivors were still being stigmatized," says Mohamed Swarray, an Ebola survivor who worked at a center in Sierra Leone, tracking down children's family members so they could be reunited. ChildFund focused on spreading accurate information and dispelling rumors. In the early months of the crisis, community members were uninformed about the virus, particularly how dangerous it was to continue ritual bathing of the dead and that washing their hands multiple times a day was crucial to preventing Ebola's spread.

ChildFund trained youth to disseminate information, making announcements via megaphone, watching for sick people crossing borders into different countries and conducting door-to-door outreach. At a time when some people ran and hid from outsiders in white medical coats, the youth served as a familiar and reliable source of information.

A third significant piece of ChildFund's anti-Ebola efforts was to help distribute disinfectant, detergent, bleach, fresh water and hand-washing supplies donated by gift-in-kind partners.

Corporate donors also filled important needs elsewhere. Kaz donated Braun non-contact thermometers to check for spiking temperatures, a major sign of Ebola infection. Packets of oral rehydration solution from the DripDrop Foundation replenished electrolytes and rehydrated many people, from the sick to doctors engaged in health interventions for 14 to 16 hours a day. AmeriCares and MedShare provided protective gear for health care workers. Children in care centers played with toys donated by Hasbro and Good360. And when the children went home to their families, they carried with them reunification packages of bedding, clothes, toiletries, rice and more, which AmeriCares also funded.

By spring 2015, there were fewer cases of Ebola in West Africa, although hygiene awareness efforts continued through summer and early fall. Liberia declared itself Ebola-free in May (and again in September), and the worst of the epidemic appears to have passed in Guinea and Sierra Leone.

In Sierra Leone, health workers carry baby Ibrahim while wearing protective gear donated by AmeriCares.

Jumbe Sebuya, ChildFund West Africa regional director, holds a baby in Liberia as the Ebola crisis winds down.

"After the trauma of seeing their own parents become deathly ill and die, and then being shunned by fearful neighbors and relatives, the children needed safe places to stay and receive comfort and care."

Many people were touched by the plight of children affected by Ebola. Compelled to help, Roberto Conterno, owner of Italian winemaker Giacomo Conterno, contacted Jeffrey Porter, beverage director for the Batali & Bastianich Hospitality Group, the restaurant company co-owned by chefs Mario Batali, Joe Bastianich and Lidia Bastianich. In February, Conterno hosted an event at Del Posto, the group's fine-dining restaurant in New York City, raising $10,000 for ChildFund's Ebola response fund. "We were all on board from the beginning," Porter said. "To provide any support for such a worthy cause is worth all our effort."

ChildFund was recognized for our work in West Africa, as the 2015 NGO Partner of the Year by Airlink, a rapid-response disaster and humanitarian relief organization that connects nonprofits with airlines. We joined with Airlink to deliver three planes full of supplies to the region.

Natural Disasters Strike

ChildFund International supported our fellow ChildFund Alliance members in fundraising for victims of the Nepal earthquake and Vanuatu's typhoon in 2015. In Nepal, where ChildFund Japan works, a 7.8-magnitude earthquake in April devastated entire communities and left thousands dead. Our donors helped Japan's effort to distribute food and other emergency supplies in the weeks after the disaster.

After a Category 5 cyclone hit the tiny island nation of Vanuatu in March, U.S. donors joined ChildFund Australia's support of a partner organization on the ground there. Months later, schools have been rebuilt and reopened, and fresh water is easier to access, although work still continues.

When a 7.8-magnitude earthquake struck Nepal last spring, ChildFund responded immediately to support ChildFund Japan in distributing food and providing shelter for families in four villages devastated by the earthquake.

LETTER FROM THE CFAO

Thank you for so generously supporting our work with children and families worldwide in 2015. Revenues to ChildFund International surpassed $248 million, including a record high of over $40 million in grant funding, which enabled us to strengthen our programs to help children thrive at all stages of life. We were grateful also to address the critical needs of children and families caught in the Ebola crisis.

Important partners in our work, our fellow ChildFund Alliance members contributed 20 percent of this year's revenues to help children and families. Although a strengthened U.S. dollar in fiscal 2015 caused a foreign exchange loss of more than $4 million over the course of the year, I am happy to report we were able to maintain the quality of our programs because the purchasing power of the dollar remained strong in areas where we work. Moreover, we both raised the percentage of expenses for program services to 84.6 percent and lowered our management and general expenses by almost $1 million, demonstrating our commitment to careful stewardship of every dollar our generous supporters entrust to us.

We remain grateful to you for joining us in helping to change children's lives around the world.

Sincerely,

James M. Tuite

Thank you.

Your thoughtful support is transforming the lives of the 19.7 million children and family members participating in our programs in 30 countries, including the United States.

We are honored to recognize the following individuals, foundations, corporations and organizations who have generously partnered with ChildFund. This list recognizes both annual and lifetime leadership gifts.

Asterisks denote members of ChildFund's Heritage Circle, about 50,000 current supporters who have given generously to children through ChildFund for over 25 years — more than 3,000 of whom have supported ChildFund for 45 years or more.

The following supporters have donated $25,000 or more to ChildFund over the years, including a gift of $250 or more in fiscal year 2015. Donors listed in green gave $2,500 or more in the past fiscal year.

Partnering with USAID to Protect Children With Disabilities

Protecting children with disabilities means giving them the chance to go to school, learn job skills, participate in their communities and follow their passions. In countries like Belarus, where institutionalizing children with disabilities is standard, it also means allowing them to live in a family-like setting and receive the services they need. For the last 10 years, ChildFund has partnered with USAID, local government agencies and donors to develop better services for Belarusian children with disabilities and work for their greater inclusion in schools, the workplace and society at large. This large-scale project, Community Services to Vulnerable Groups, has included wide-ranging programs and services, many geared toward helping families and caregivers keep children with disabilities in the home and out of institutions.

Generous support from ChildFund donors allowed us to extend our work in Belarus to other children at risk of institutionalization. We developed a comprehensive program of day care that also provides services for parents, including counseling and violence prevention training. Based on this model, we established day care centers in three Belarusian communities. The centers offer safe places for children to play, be active and complete homework under the supervision of supportive adults, and to receive services like individual and group therapy. At the end of 2015, ChildFund's role concludes, but the program continues and its success has prompted the Belarusian Ministry of Education to take steps toward replicating it nationwide.

Remembering Our Friend, Lewis Booker

A beautiful and large tree fell in the forest of humanity when Lewis T. Booker passed away in April 2015.

ChildFund International benefited from Lewis' wisdom, generosity and talent for almost 40 years. A lifelong resident of Richmond, Virginia, Lewis joined the Hunton & Williams law firm following his active military service. Lewis traveled all over the world for what was then Christian Children's Fund as he drafted all of the original governance agreements and founding documents, pro bono, in support of the creation of ChildFund Alliance. Throughout his life, personally and professionally, he never shied away from responsibility and epitomized the beliefs of our founder, Dr. J. Calvitt Clarke.

Lewis was a well-known presence in the international nonprofit community both for his legal prowess and his love for children. Lewis believed that all progress begins with a single question, "What needs to be done?" His work will continue to benefit millions of children around the world for years to come.

Lewis gave himself to every task he undertook, and his life will always be an inspiration to all of us to serve with passion and live with purpose. As a friend, colleague and fellow board member, Lewis will be forever missed.

Investment Funds

For more than 75 years, ChildFund International has been identifying and addressing the root causes of the poverty that affects children around the world. Today, we are doing this in 30 countries, including the United States.

Our investment funds are essential in helping the 19.7 million children and family members we serve move beyond poverty to a better life. The initiatives that the funds support help to ensure that infants are healthy and secure, children are educated and confident, and youth are skilled and involved. Our investment funds include:

THE EMERGENCY ACTION FUND

Earthquakes, floods, epidemics. A disaster like Typhoon Haiyan can derail a child's life. And when that child lives in poverty, life is even more fragile. ChildFund responds to emergencies with an eye toward the specific needs of children. By donating to our Emergency Action Fund, you help us stay prepared for the next disaster.

EARLY CHILDHOOD DEVELOPMENT

The first five years of a child's life are the most crucial for healthy growth and development. It is also when children are most vulnerable. ChildFund's early childhood development program helps families and communities give children the support they need in the pivotal early years. With your assistance, communities can provide preschools, parenting education, home visits and more to help the next generation thrive.

CHILD PROTECTION

Children worldwide, of all ages, religions and cultures, suffer violence, exploitation and abuse every day. Those raised in the world's poorest communities are especially at risk. ChildFund helps families and communities protect children. We take a comprehensive approach, working with local partners to educate children, families, community institutions and the larger society about how to both prevent and respond to threats against children. Your involvement helps keep them safe.

Thank you for your partnership and support.

To learn how you can support any of these essential funds for children, please contact the Philanthropy Department at (804) 545-3620. For more information, visit our website at www.ChildFund.org.

"I want to become a doctor. When I was in the third grade, I got a shot and I didn't cry," says Salma, of Indonesia.

CLEAN WATER FOR CHILDREN

Each year, an estimated 3.4 million people die due to inadequate water supply, sanitation and hygiene, and many of them are children. Your gift will help dig wells, build latrines, identify and purify contaminated water sources, install water catchment systems and teach families about safe water management and household hygiene.

FAMILY/YOUTH INCOME GENERATION

Vocational skills and training can lead to a more productive and self-sufficient adulthood. Livestock and agricultural endeavors contribute to a healthy and nutritious diet as well as additional income when surplus is sold at the local market. And home-based businesses give parents greater flexibility. Your gift will provide the tools necessary for youth and young adults to become more independent.

CHILDREN'S GREATEST NEEDS

This special fund is an invaluable resource that has the flexibility to be directed when and where it is needed most. It is used to develop, operate and provide diverse and far-reaching programs and services for children, families and their communities.

Children at this school in Khireswari, India, proudly display their Dream Bikes. Receiving a Dream Bike can mean the difference between whether or not some children attend school. For many of these students, the long and dangerous trek to school has become much safer and quicker because they received bicycles.
